Meals-on-Wheels making it work amid rising food prices

By Sarah Pledge Dickson

As food prices continue to rise across the country, senior residents of Lennoxville, Waterville and North Hatley can continue to rely on the Meals-on-Wheels program.

Bridget Suitor is the executive director of Lennoxville & District Community Aid, an organization that provides services including food delivery and transportation services.

"The cost of food is rising and it does show in our budget," she says. "But we have amazing cooks that just have a way of making it work."

Meals-on-Wheels consists of volunteers cooking and delivering full

By Mable Hastings

Auto repair shop owner, Craig Sherrer ran his own business in his hometown of Dunkin from 1993 to 2021 when he retired. He and his wife Marcelle raised their sons in the small town and Craig did the auto mechanics on many vehicles establishing his own business over the years. Dunkin is a small town nestled in the valley between Glen Sutton and Mansonville surrounded by mountains with the Missisquoi River flowing gently by. The Sherrer family ran a farm for many years in the town and many family members remain in the area.
